BALKAN ARMIES

London, Dec. 20.—The Servian and Montenegrin armies have again joined after the defeat of the Austrians who invaded Servia, and are now making their second advance toward Sarajevo, capital of Rosnia.

The two armies, the supplies of which have been replenished by captures from the Austrians, have formed a junction near Vishegrad, which the Montenegrins have occupied. They expect to be before Sarajevo in three or four days.

London. Dec. 9.—There are many things which General von Bernhardi, whose book is by now familiar to most of us, by repute at least, is willing to promise the German people if only they will fall down and worship the ideal of national life and policy which he sets before them. It is true that the things belong for the moment to other people, but that can soon be put right. The fruit—French plums or British peaches—is ripe; it needs only a strong and resolute hand to pick it.

But among all his promises there is

But among all his promises there is one omission. I do not know whether or how far it may seem a remarkable omission in German eyes; to an Englishman it certainly appears so, and, as should suppose, would so appear to a Frenchman or an American. Among all he rewards of victory which he daugles before the eyes of the conquering Germans, the irresistible race which is to barrels. Will stiffe the mild suggestion that a via media was really open to Germany is the had been content to take it. On this hypothesis, then, what is the lookout for the rest of the world, and especially for that "great part of humanity" which is to be "stamped with the impress of the German spirit" that spirit which, among its other man ifestations, manifests a willingness to nacept.
